coming year.

Justin Bieber

“If I was your boyfriend.” SCREAM! “Like baby, baby, baby, oh.” SCREAM! Get out your earplugs, Mom and Dad. The adulation will be deafening when teen idol Bieber, touring behind his smash hit “Believe” CD, returns to town for what is sure to be the first huge concert of the year.

Brahms Festival

The San Antonio Symphony, which made a huge splash with its exploration of all things Beethoven in 2012, turns its attention to Brahms. The fest delves deep: In addition to the symphony concerts, the festival will include a film, a piece by Alamo Arts Ballet Theatre, performances under the auspices of the Cactus Pear Music Festival and various chamber ensembles as well as a joint performance by the Youth Orchestras of San Antonio and the Children's Chorus of San Antonio.

“The Rite of Spring”

Arts San Antonio is helping mark the 100th anniversary of the incendiary ballet “The Rite of Spring” with a string of events — including a film screening and glitzy society events — building toward the Joffrey Ballet's performance of the piece. The production, which marks the Joffrey's first performance here in more than 30 years, re-creates Vaslav Nijinsky's original choreography and Nicholas Roerich's original scenery and costumes.

“Glengarry Glen Ross”

David Mamet's profane look at a group of real estate salesmen scrambling to get by is getting a bit of a makeover. The show, written for an all-male cast, will include a few women, adding a
