DANCE PERFORMANCE

Ajazzy 'Streetcar'

The Scottish Ballet Company is bringing its take on "A Streetcar Named Desire" to the Tobin Center for the Performing Arts as part of Arts San Antonio's current season. The performance is the second stop on the company's American tour of the piece, which was developed to mark the 65th anniversary of Tennessee Williams' play. Williams' story — about a fragile woman whose world is upended — is set to a jazz-inspired score written by Peter Salem.

Courtney Love makes belated return

Sixteen years ago, Courtney Love nearly made it to San Antonio with her band Hole. The group, which at the time had been touring with Marilyn Manson, dropped off the tour one week before it was to arrive at the Alamodome in March 1999. Reportedly, Manson had been taunting Love during her shows and a local radio program director in the loop chalked it up to "massive egos." Love, one of rock's wildest hot messes, has proven to be a survivor, an accomplished actress, a hilarious celebrity interview, grunge fashion icon, loyal keeper of Kurt Cobain's legacy and unabashed, uninhibited rock 'n' roller.
